When choosing to copy the trading activity of a Provider, the Company will make every effort to replicate all of the Provider’s trades in your Follower’s account. However, there are certain situations where the Follower’s account may not have sufficient available margin to copy the Provider’s trades, resulting in the rejection of the copying order.

Furthermore, the Follower’s risk management and copying strategies may lead to the rejection of a trade being copied by the Follower, if the lot size of the Provider’s position falls outside the specified minimum and maximum volume range set by the Follower. Instances of high market volatility can also result in the rejection of trades. This can happen when the trading system, despite multiple attempts, is unable to provide a satisfactory market price due to the high market volatility. It is important to note that rejected trades will not be included in any reports generated.
